Jane Koppelman bio

Jane Koppelman is Research Director for the Pew Charitable Trusts Dental Campaign, where she manages the project’s research portfolio on state policy re oral health care access, Medicaid and other federal health programs, and emerging strategies to improve oral health access for low income and underserved populations.

Prior to joining Pew, Ms. Koppelman spent more than 20 years researching, reporting on, administering, and evaluating health and human service programs that support disadvantaged families. As a Senior Manager with The Lewin Group, a health and human services research and consulting firm, she oversaw a variety of projects funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, including advising federal grantees on how to conduct rigorous evaluations. As Deputy Director of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation’s Making the Grade program, she worked to increase the number of school-based health centers nationwide. Ms. Koppelman was also a senior researcher with The George Washington University’s National Health Policy Forum, where she wrote analyses for federal policy makers on the effectiveness of a range of government programs designed to improve the health and economic security of disadvantaged children.

Ms. Koppelman earned a master’s degree in public administration from the George Washington University.